

Police and Peace Officers' National Memorial Day, Sunday, September 26

Since 1998, communities across the country hold memorial services on the last Sunday of September to commemorate police and peace officers who were killed in the line of duty.

Police and Peace Officers' National Memorial Day recognizes the valuable contributions of Canadian police and peace officers to public safety.

In past years, the Canadian flag has been lowered on this day of remembrance.

With Canadian flags at City facilities already at half-mast to commemorate the discovery of remains at the former Kamloops Indian Residential School, we encourage everyone to find their own way to take the time to reflect on the hard work, dedication and sacrifices made by Canadian police and peace officers every day.
